cannot go to school, the Upper Tier local authority must find out why. If there is a duty for it to act, it must make alternative arrangements to provide suitable education. The key learning point the Ombudsman wants to highlight is that Upper Tier Authorities have the duty to arrange alternative education, not the school a child attends. Councils need some way to identify when their duty has arisen. Councils will be held to account if things go wrong.			school to access their education. Alternative education provision providers and oversight of those arrangements. Timescales for assessments and alternative provision, learning from complaints about the service.	provide alternative education provision. A sample of the parents of the children who fall into this category A representative from the Ombudsman's Office who can speak on this matter.	Helping to ensuring that local services do not exacerbate mental health issues for children in this category. The Ombudsman reports seeing increasing numbers of cases where children are unable to attend school because of anxiety. Often, these cases involve children with special educational needs which have yet to be fully understood. There may be little, or even conflicting, evidence about the child's needs. Nevertheless, councils must assess the available evidence and decide for themselves whether they have a statutory duty to make other arrangements for the child's education. They should take action without delay.
