2 December 2024

The tree is a large specimen situated in the rear garden of the host property and not featuring prominently in the public realm.

There is extensive deadwood throughout the canopy of the tree and several damaged branches that are caught up in the crown. There are pockets of decay in old pruning wounds and signs of woodpecker activity.

The tree is fully mature and showing signs of decline. The proposed works will help to rejuvenate the tree and reduce the likelihood of branch failure.
